Daniel Rios was born and raised in Bakersfield, California to the parents of Rudy Rios and Cindy Switzer. He graduated from Bakersfield High School in 2009 and went on to receive his Associates Degree from Bakersfield College in 2012. In 2015, Daniel Rios received his Bachelor’s Degree in History from the UC Merced. He also received his Master’s Degree in Interdisciplinary Humanities from UC Merced in 2018. His research explores the political, social, geographic, and cultural production of Bakersfield in the 20th century by examining how the interplay of race, class, gender, and labor played a central role in shaping the daily lives of working class communities of color. Currently, Daniel Rios is a graduate student pursuing a PhD in Ethnic Studies at the University of California, San Diego.
