Dear Colleagues,

With the holidays here, we often tend to find our thoughts drifting towards some common themes. Food, family, faith, friends, celebrations, and did I mention good food? The next few days are a special time to be with our families and remind ourselves of the things for which we are thankful. Not the tangible things like possessions either; it’s the things that truly count, the things that enrich our lives beyond measure.

It would be nearly impossible to complete a list of things for which my heart is thankful... because the list grows every week. But, I’d like to share just a few in no particular order:

We are BC! and in addition, we are a family. The bonds we have formed with our colleagues have become friendships and we work together achieving our mission, upholding our core values, and relentlessly supporting our students to reach their maximum potential and educational goals. Our campus is a place of true hope, transformation, and dreams. The opportunities we have to change lives is an incredible blessing and I’m left without words considering both the purpose and the privilege we have to be the pillar of hope in the lives of our students.

I’m thankful for quality affordable education we provide. We foster our core value of learning by empowering all students and ultimately transforming our community into one that gives a healthy voice and strength to all people.
I'm thankful for each and every one of you; staff, faculty, and administrators ... for your unique talents and multitude of gifts; for what you bring to the campus each day; for what you offer to our community; for your heart and passion to educate and to really make a difference in the lives of our students.

Thank you for making BC a successful and beautiful place to call our second home. May the gifts of love, peace, and happiness be with you and your families this holiday season.
